EAST OTISFIELD.

Last Sabbath was observed as Children's Day at the F. B. church. A very interesting discourse appropriate to the occasion was delivered by the pastor, Rev. F. W. Towne, followed by interesting exercises by the children. The church was beautifully decorated with flowers and evergreens, and several cages of birds added their notes of joy and praise to the songs of the children, which were listened to by a large and appreciative audience.

NED V.
Bay stallion; no white; 15¾ hands high, and weighs 1050 pounds; bred by J. B. Farnum, Pittsfield, Me., owned by Wheeler & True, So. paris, Me.; foaled May 15, 1885. Sire, Thomas Carlyle, 3250; first dam, by Gen. Lyons; second dam, by Gideon. Thomas Carlyle, by Gen. Withers, 1157. First dam, Alice, by Ledo, son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Second dam, by the Burnett horse, son of Old Drew. Third dam by Old Eaton. Gen. Withers: by Almont, 33, sire of 34 in 2:30 list. First dam, Bloom, by Ashland, son of Membrino Chief. Second dam, Lady Brant by Toronto Chief. Third dam, by Old Kentucky Thoroughbred. Gen. Lyons; by Diamond, son of Old Drew. First dam, by the Avery Horse, the sire of Eaton.
Ned V. is a large, rangy built colt, of his age but is symmetrical in form and shows no courseness in his make-up. He displays remarkably good trotting action, and at 16 months of age he obtained a public record of 1:47, for a half mile; and his increase of speed since then has been very marked. Combining as he does the requisites of good breeding, fine size and plenty of speed, he should prove a successful sire. Terms, $25.00 to insure. Book full. Will make the season at the stable of W. J. Wheeler, So. Paris, Me. 1 1f

BAY HARBINGER.
(STANDARD)
Bay stallion; 15 hands high; weight, 900 pounds; bred by Florence Thompson, Pittsfield, Me., owned by Wheeler & Bumpus, So. Paris, Me., foaled July 3d, 1885. Sire, Harbinger, 1899. First dam, by Von Moltke, sire of Flora, 2:25¼, Boston Girl, 2:25¼, Canard, 2:30. Second dam, by Monte Christo, son of Gen. Knox. Harbinger, by Almont, (33) sire of 34 in 2:30 list. First dam, Omega, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Second dam, Dairy Maid, by Seeley's American Star, sire of the dam of Dexter, and the dams of 33 others in the 2:30 list. Almont, by Alexander's Abdallah, sire of Goldsmith Maid, 2:14. First dam, Sally Anderson, by Membrino Chief, sire of Lady Thorne, 2:18. Second dam, Kate, by Pilot, Jr., sire of the dams of Maud S. 2:08¾; Jay Eye See, 2:10; Nutwood, 2:18¾. Alexander's Abdallah, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, dam, Katie Darling, said to be by son of Andrew Jackson. Von Moltke, 4195 by the Morrill colt, son of Old Drew; dam by the Merrow horse, son of Witherell, by Winthrop Messenger.
Bay Harbinger is a good sized colt, with fine style, beauty and finish, has the best of limbs and feet, he has an attractive way of going, and shows a gait that indicates speed. His sire, Harbinger, is a very popular sire of fast colts, having got Harebell, record 2:45½ as a two-year-old, besides many others known to be fast, and the sire of his dam, Von Moltke, Flora 2:30¼, is a trotter, himself and a sire of trotters. Will make the season at the stable of W. J. Wheeler, South Paris, Maine. Terms, $25.00 to insure. Limited to five mares for 1887. 18tf

THOMAS CARLYLE.
—STANDARD 3250.—
Mahogany bay stallion, with black points, the black extending above his knees; no white; 15½ hands high; bred by A. N. Burrill, Hartland, Me; owned by W. J. Wheeler and D. N. True, South Paris; foaled May 4, 1882. Sire, Gen. Withers, 1157. First dam, Alice, by Ledo, son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Second dam, Jessie, by Burnett horse. Third dam, Kate, by Old Eaton. 122.
Gen. Withers, by Almont, 33, sire of Westmont, 2 13¾ (pacer); Fannie Witherspoon, 2 16¼; Piedmont, 2.17¼; Aldine, 2.19½; Early Rose, 2.20¼; and 27 with records of 2.30 or better and 93 with public records.
Ledo, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, 10, sire of 39 with records of 2.30 or better. First dam, Miss Cooley, by Telegraph, by Cassius M. Clay, 20: Burnett horse, by Old Drew 111. Old Eaton, by Messenger.
Thomas Carlyle is a horse of unusually fine finish; has a clean cut head, neck well arched, and both carried in a very attractive manner. His legs are of the right shape, and are clean and flat, without surplus hair. His back is of medium length and is well coupled, and he has good muscular developement throughout. His way of going is like the Almonts, displaying as he does powerful hock action, and a square and open gait. He has never been trained, but in his exercise has shown his ability to beat 2.40. He is a perfect horse in every point, and his breeding is second to none. He is individually a colt of rare merit, and from his rich inheritance should be both a trotter and a sire of trotters. He is the sire of Ned V., who got one-half mile record in 1.47 when sixteen months old, Sept. 21, 1886, at Oxford Co. track. He will make the season of 1887 at the stable of W. J. Wheeler, South Paris, Me.
Terms $25 to insure. 18tf

THE HAMBLETONIAN STALLION
RODRICK!
Will make the season of 1887, at Rumford Center, Maine.
This horse is a beautiful brown color, stands 16¼ hands high, and weighs 1140 lbs.; was foaled May 4th, 1881; took 3d premium at the New England Fair, held at Bangor in 1885; also the 1st premium at the Penobscot Co. Fair in 1883 and 1884. He has been driven but very little, and shows a nice gait.
RODRICK is by Messenger Hunter, Jr., he by Messenger Hunter. The dam of Messenger Hunter was a Black Hawk mare. Grand dam was by Defiance. Rodrick's dam, Blossom, is by Gideon, he by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, and is too well and favorably known to need further comment. Bossom's dam was the S. Y. Luce mare, she by imported Wild Perry. Blossom is a half sister to the Buckskin Fox, formerly owned by Henry McLaughlin, of Bangor, Me. Fox trotted in 2.29 and was sold for $3,000. Gideon, the sire of Blossom, is the sire of Ezra L., record 2:21¼; Bay, 2.27; and said to be the sire of Boston Girl, 2.25¼; also the sire of the dams of Independence, 2.21¼, Glenarm, 2.23¾, Susie Owen, 2.26, Nelson, 2.26¾, and Hambletonian Knox, 2.28.
TERMS to warrant, $10. No risks will be taken on mares. Bills due when mares prove with foal. Mares disposed of considered with foal. No business done on the Sabbath. The horse will be cheerfully shown at the stable of 15tf W. J. KIMBALL, Rumford Center Me.

RINALDO.
Dark bay Stallion with black points, bred at the Marshland Stock Farm, N. Y., by Gen. B. F. Tracy.
Sire MAMBRINO DUDLEY, 2.20¼; son of WOODFORD MAMBRINO, 2.21½; (sire of Pancast, 2.21¼; Abbottsford, 2.19½; Mambrino Dudley, 2.20¼; and eight others with record better than 2.30;) he by MAMBRINO CHIEF (sire of Lady Thorne, 2.18¼; Woodford's Mambrino, 2.21½; and four others with records better than 2.30;) Rinaldo's first dam Winalah by WEDGEWOOD, 2.19; (sire of Cannought, 2.21; Nugget, 2.26¾; Viva, 2.27; Favania, 2.27½; Conway, 2.18¾;) son of BELMONT, sire of Nutwood, 2.18¾; Viking, 2.20¼; King Jim, 2.20¼; Dick Moore, 2 22¼ and thirteen others with records better than 2.30.
Second dam HERMOSA (trial 2.26½) dam of Hermes, 2.27¼. Third dam BLACK ROSE dam of Darkness, 2.27¾; Native American, 2.32¾; Rosco (trial) 2.30.
RINALDO is a very popular bred horse with a rich inheritance of speed, being trotting bred for four generations and thirteen out of fourteen ancestors are standard animals. It is a question if this can be said of any stallion standing in the stud in New England. Rinaldo is four years old this spring and weighs 1100 lbs., and stands 15¾ hands high. He has never been speeded but will be at the proper time. If he does not trot fast it is no use to try to breed a trotter from trotting stock. With his size, color and rich breeding he must prove a valuable stock horse. Oxford County breeders I believe will improve this opportunity of getting some fine brood mares from him.
Terms $25 cash by the season with free return privilege for such that fail to get in foal.

Norway Village in the Forties. No. 36.

We trust the readers of these little sketches, if any there are, will imagine the scribe is not responsible for all the errors, for they can be sure the printer should come in for his share.

After a rest of one week we find ourselves again in the ancient "graveyard" on the top of Pike Hill. We have already said something of the ghost-haunted, one-storied house we passed in coming here from the way of the village and up the big hill. It rests so squarely upon mother earth, that one might suppose it intended to always live right there, regardless of the coming and going of man, or the age of the world we live in. As one passes by, the inside, sliding, wooden shutters are plainly visible thro' the 7 x 9 glass, and the ancient chimney with brick enough to almost build a modern house seems to stand as solidly upon its feet as it did the day in the long gone past when John Pike built it. The glass in the windows which had withstood the storms and tempests of this climate for nearly a century and the sports and combats of many families of children, has now given up the good fight and been driven from the field by the guerilla attacks of wandering Arabs in the short clothes and bare feet of small boys—those terrible enemies of deserted houses. Not a pane of glass is left whole in all the windows of the desolate old ruin, and the poor thing seems to shrivel and shrink away as one passes by as the twilight deepens, as if in very pain at its forlorn condition. It would require but a slight stirring of the imagination to see the shadowy forms of some of the fifteen children of John Pike once more playing their childish games in the solitary rooms or musty attic of the old mansion. They would be clothed in homespun, with caps and hats mostly of home-make, and without covering for their feet, even in winter-time until of age to be of much help to farmer John.

As has been told John Pike came up this great hill and took up land here in 1793 and soon thereafter, quite soon reports agree in saying, built this house. This somewhat noted John of the Pike family, who together with his brother Dudley, gave this isolated hill its name, was born one hundred and twenty-four years ago the second day of last May in the town of Middleton, N. H., and came up here for the first time a few days after he was thirty years' old. It is reported of him that he was a great worker, steady and industrious, and those were the times when work was a man's capital. He certainly performed his part towards populating the new town. He had a voice like a lion (almost) which was noted throughout the little settlement for its volume and force.

On the upper side of the road, opposite the old house, close inspection will disclose the remains of an old cellar, and the spot where another house once stood. It came to pass as the years went by and his children grew up, and John himself became patriarchal in appearance, it was agreed that his son Charles, the seventh child and fourth boy in the order of birth, should live at home, so that when the father, John should out-grow the house he had built and should conclude to move up into this graveyard into a more permanent home, the boy Charles could care for the farm.

In an evil hour however, John Pike concluded he needed more land, and so purchased of "old 'Squire Whitney," how much is not known, in the vicinity of the present covered bridge in the edge of Oxford, mortgaging the new purchase and also the old farm. As the result of this arrangement 'Squire Whitney, in the course of time, became the owner of this old homestead, Pike reserving only the right to take down and remove the house he had built for his son Charles on the upper or southeasterly side of the road. When the reader next rides towards Oxford on the Fore Street road, if he will call a halt one moment just before he passes the placid waters of the Little Androscoggin by the way of the covered bridge and look over the bottom lands to the right, eighty rods or so, he will discover an old fashioned farm house, with sheds and a barn beyond. That is the house that was built by our John for his son Charles, and in that house John Pike lived after he left the old homestead until '44, when at the ripe old age of eighty-one he was gathered to his fathers, and here in this old "graveyard" he sleeps as regally as a king, and as happy as tho' he had died worth his millions.

As we have heretofore seen, Dudley Pike came up this hill in 1787, just one hundred years ago, and passing by the spot where John six years afterwards settled, and this height of land where now the old settlers are all happily gathered together in sweet peace and quiet rest, and built his log hut where that large, double two-storied house now stands just below us to the left. He sold a part of his original purchase from the proprietor Rust, on the southwesterly side, which became known as the Ephraim Briggs' farm. Nathaniel, the seventh child, remained on the home place and died there. Henry, the eight child, when he became of age, came into possession of the northwesterly position of the original purchase, whether by purchase or gift is not known. This includes that beautiful grove of young pines, which almost hides the midday sun, at the left and above the traveller, as he journeys along the foot of the Pennesseewassee Pond, towards the pleasent little settlement of Norway Lake. Henry Pike, son of Dudley, lived on this part of the original purchase of his father, until his death in Sept., '86—being at the time of his death about ninety year's old. At present the old place is cared for by his daughter, Carrie L. A. and her husband, J. A. Roberts, who is not only a farmer, but an Attorney at Law as well, and is also one of the selectmen of Norway. And a pleasant couple they are, and soberly and industriously do they look after the old homestead, and so time flies and the world grows old, and the Pikes, like other mortals, complete the work assigned them and come riding up here at last, glad to get home I doubt not and be at rest. And so the ancient house of Henry, square and two-storied with its hip roof and old-style finish, is occupied by the granddaughter of the first settler on the hill top, Dudley Pike.

We see that the Pikes are a wonderfully long-lived race, many have died in the eighties and several in the nineties.

Dudley Pike's first born he called John. John's third child was named Seth, and this Seth, grandson of the old settler, is the Seth who repaired the fense by the graveyard next the highway and cleared the land within, and so carefully hung the gates, through which he was the first to be borne to his final rest.

Uncle Daniel kindly responds and relates what he knows of the tavern on Fore Street in Oxford, in old times. The scribe can add a little to the general stock of knowledge. As Uncle Daniel says it stood a little north of the lower railway crossing. Really it stood where Mr. Lovering's fine looking house now stands—the last house on the left going down. It was built by Tristam Richards about '26. It was a two-storied, gambrel-roofed house with an ell, and the stable stood a little below upon the same side of the street, next to the street and entirely separated from the house. It was probably built expressly for a hotel, and was kept by Robert Pike for two or three years, then by Eben Drake for about three years. Joseph Wilson then bought it and kept tavern in it for some twenty years. He came from Falmouth. There is some doubt whether Pike and Drake kept tavern when they lived there, though the best evidence says they did. Here was dispensed the pure New England and the still stronger drinks, as free as the Adam's Ale of nature's own brewing and almost as cheap. And here Uncle Daniel says he has seen that stalwart, eloquent lawyer, R. A. L. Codman of Portland, while on his way to Paris Hill to attend court, along in the Forties, call for his glass of brandy, drink it like a loyal citizen as he was, and go on his way rejoicing. The scribe remembers the man well—at least as he appeared to his youthful eyes. Tall, well-proportioned, rugged, with a ruddy, well-colored countenance, every way full of vigor, companionable, a good story-teller, generous to a fault, with a strong love for justice, ready at all times to champion the cause of the poor and friendless, with an eloquence when fully aroused that carried spectators, jury and possibly the judge himself with him, he was felt to be a power in the courts of the state for many years, and when he appeared on Paris Hill, the Oxford Bears gathered at the courthouse to listen to the eloquent intellectual treat that was sure to come.

Some of the early numbers of this series gave an account of the two trials of Totherly of Norway for the death of young Hobbs, and the reader will perhaps remember that he was convicted of manslaughter at the second trial and sentenced to confinement in the county jail for a short term. There has been a question as to whether he was permitted to go before the expiration of his sensentence on condition that he would enlist for the Mexican war. A few days since the scribe saw the jailor who had him in charge while in confinement, and he states that he discharged him at the expiration of his term and not before.

Douglass Seminary, Waterford.

Commencement June 19-21.

Baccalaureate Sermon, June 19, by Rev. Mr. Skinner. Examination of the classes, public, during Monday and Tuesday forenoon. Address before the graduating class by Rev. T. M. Beadenkoff of North Waterford. A good house was in attendance upon the occasion of this address. Mr. B. said his address would be something like the verses and chapters of the scriptures, as divided up by a man upon horseback, broken up by his ride to the place. His subject—Education of Women. Said it is to draw out and develop what is in one rather than to fill him up with information. Urged students to use books only as tools which, when they had done their work are to be laid aside. Said that a doctor, lawyer or minister's professional studies and acquirements are not his education. That woman comes to her truer place as she has an education equal to that given to men. They are now attending our colleges, and are being made better women, better wives and mothers, for it. "Let ladies enter the legal profession. Shall they become physicians? Yes; they are better adapted to the work of a physician than are men. Shall they become teachers? Yes; they have become, and they make, better teachers than men. (He said nothing about their being ministers.) In teaching we teach ourselves more than books. Hence let our lives and characters be ideal lives and characters."

Rev. J. S. Richards of Alfred, of the Examining Committee of the school, was present and offered prayer.

The music, piano and vocal, was by the young ladies of the school and very creditable. A song rendered by Bessie M. Smith of Auburn, was finely executed, showing musical capacity and power almost wonderful for a young lady of fifteen years, and giving good promise for the future.

On Tuesday evening three young ladies were graduated,—Ina French, of Lewiston; Augusta E. Lovewell, E. Otisfield; and Grace E. Saunders of Ellsworth. Their examination showed that they had faithfully studied, and their essays were of superior excellence.

The following was the program of the graduating exercises:

Grand March, Angie Proctor.
Prayer.
Duett, two Pianos, "Saluta Pesth," Effie Conrey and Maude Saunders.
Vocal Duett, "In Meadows Green," Grace Saunders and Bessie Smith.
Essay, "The Face an Index of the Mind," Ina French, Lewiston.
Piano Solo, "Graziella," Grace Saundars.
Vocal Solo, Winnie D. Kneeland.
Essay, "Earth's Benefactors," Augusta S. Lovewell, E. Otisfield.
Piano Solo, "La Gazelle," Effie C. Conrey.
Essay, "Pas-a-Pas, Grace Saunders, Ellsworth.
Piano Solo, "Witches' Dance," J. Rosabelle Harendean.
Presentation of Diplomas.
Benediction.

The music of both evenings was furnished entirely by the school, and was indeed very fine.

The next year begins Aug. 31, which we hope will be even a more prosperous year for the school than this, though this has been the most successful since the founding of the school. S.

From a Private Letter.

Colorado Springs, May 27th, 1887.

Dear A——: As it is raining to-day, I will try and answer your letter. I am in good health and enjoying myself very well. A—— is better than he was last month when his cough was very troublesome. We had bad weather in April which was hard for the sick people here.

At this time of year they get their rains here—not a great deal, but it does immense good in so dry a climate. The trees are all leaved out and the grass is quite green for this country. The grass never gets as green and nice as it does in the East, and the springs are not much more forward with all the warm weather that they have. Of course the high altitude and the dry climate has something to do with it. I suppose everything is looking very fine after so hard a winter. With such tough winters to pass through one appreciates the spring and summer months the more, but when the hot weather comes we wish for cold, and so it is hard to find a climate that will suit us the whole year around.

There are some very fine places about here that I haven't visited yet, such as the "Roil George" near Canon City. There the rocks rise three thousand feet perpendicularly above the railroad track and there wasn't room for the road until they had blasted away the rocks. There is a swift stream that flows through the canon. They say it is a wonderful sight to behold. I mean to go there sometime this summer if they have any excursions which they almost always do. A—— and I had a very pleasant trip up in the mountains the other day. We were acquainted with a conductor who runs to the front where they are laying the track. It is on the new road that is being built from here to Leadville, and also farther on. It is called the Midland R. R. It is a great undertaking to build a broad gauge road through the mountains, but money will accomplish almost anything in these days.

You of course have heard, or read of, the old "overland road" through the "Ute Pass" into California, which was the only way they could get through the mountains? Well, this railroad follows this road for some distance, only the railroad is built in many places a number of hundred feet above it, dug right into the side of the rocks. If one should roll down the side of the mountain it would be the last of him.

Soon after we entered the mountains we rode over one mile that had five tunnels in it, and on the left the rocks were very high. I wouldn't dare to guess how high as one can't tell much by his eye the distance that is before him in this country. Distances are deceptive to the eye.

Soon after we left the tunnels we came into "Eleven Mile Canon." There we rode on top of the caboose, which gave us a fine view of the canon. It seemed to be the only place that they could get through the mountains. In this canon there is a stream flowing through as there is in almost all canons. They are very narrow, too, just room for the water to flow through. In this one it was narrow and crooked. We would look ahead and think how are we to get out of this place—when the road would make a short turn around a ledge into another opening. At some curves you could not see two cars at a time; and so it was this way all through the eleven miles.

In many places the rocks and ledges towered many hundred feet above the road, making it a grand sight which one can hardly describe in writing.

After we got through the canon we came out into a Park, as they call it here. It is a large tract of level ground. I think it was some thirty miles in length. After passing over that we went into the mountains again. We went within thirty miles of Leadville the "city of the clouds," so called, that has an elevation of over 10,000 feet. The highest elevation we reached that day was 9,500 feet. At that height it affected A——some showing that the "Springs" is plenty high enough for him.

It was ninety miles to the place where we went. We started at ten in the morning and got back the next morning at five. I enjoyed my trip very much. Wish you could be here to see some of the sights. You might find something interesting to write about. What I have seen of other places I think I like Colorado Springs best to live in the year through. Canon City is said to be a better place in the winter, for it is surrounded with mountains that protect one from the winds and dust; and beside it has a lower altitude and warmer. Pueblo is another place forty-five miles south of here with a lower altitude and some think it is a better town to stop in than the "Springs." I haven't been to either place to stop.

It is raining hard this forenoon which makes it seem like an Eastern day. It is just what we need here in this dry climate.

They have a free reading room here, and a good one, so that one can spend very profitable time there when he feels like it. We also have some very good preaching here. Most of the ministers are here for their health or some one of their family.

Rent is very high at present. What would you think of paying from twelve to twenty dollars for a single room furnished? That is what many ask. The way they do is to hire a house and then let one room for enough to pay the rent of the whole house.

I see Mr. Sprague every day. He is quite well for him. I don't see but that he looks as well as when he used to preach at the old church in North Norway. He is in the real estate business and is doing very well.

I will close now as I fear I have already written too much. Remember me to all my friends. Hope to hear from you again soon.

Yours very truly,
EUGENE O. FRENCH.

A Proposed Convention.

The following circular has been issued by G. H. Porter of South Paris, to whom all letters should be addressed:

We would call your attention to the following extracts from the Revised Statutes of Maine and solicit your cooperation in enforcing the laws against the sale and manufacture of adulterated vinegar. The following is the law:—

REVISED STATUTES.

SEC. 8. Whoever manufactures for sale, or knowingly offers or exposes for sale, or knowingly causes to be branded or marked as cider vinegar, any vinegar not the legitimate product of pure apple juice, known as apple cider, and not made exclusively therefrom, but into which any foreign substance, ingredient, drug, or acid has been introduced, as appears by proper tests, shall, for each offence, be fined not less than fifty nor more than one hundred dollars.

SEC. 9. Whoever manufactures for sale, or knowingly offers or exposes for sale, vinegar found, upon proper tests, to contain any preparation of lead, copper, or sulphuric acid, or other ingredient injurious to health, shall for each offense, be fined not less than one hundred dollars.

SEC. 10. The Mayor and Aldermen of Cities shall, and the Selectmen of towns may, annually appoint one or more persons to be inspectors of vinegar, for their respective municipalities, who shall be sworn before entering upon their duties.

It has been suggested that the manufacturers of cider vinegar organize for mutual protection and for the suppression of the sale of the adulterated article that is shipped into the state and is now being sold to the damage of those who manufacture pure cider vinegar.

The advantages of an organization as suggested would be many. It would secure to the manufacturers of pure cider vinegar a home consumption of their product. It would protect the public from poisonous adulterations which is the intention of the law. It would assist in establishing the character of Maine vinegar in foreign markets. With the object of organizing an Association with the views as set forth it has been suggested that the vinegar manufacturers of the State meet in convention at some future date and at such place as a majority may designate.

Please give this your early attention and plainly state your views, and if there are a sufficient number to warrant, a meeting will be called at such time and place as a majority of the manufacturers may suggest.

Canton Races.

Although the day was showery there was quite a good crowd in attendance at at the Canton races Wednesday.

In the morning the Oxford base ball club arrived by special train and played the Canton nine. They had a good game until it was stopped by a shower in the seventh inning, at which time the score was even—7—7. In the afternoon came the races.

She was the daughter of Job Benson, and was born in Minot, July 21st, 1800. She was a sister of the wife of Dr. Chandler, the second physician that settled in Paris, Oxford county, and there is where she became acquainted with Dr. Holmes, who was studying medicine with Dr. Chandler. The remains were taken to Winthrop, and Wednesday last buried in Maple cemetery, by the side of her late husband.

Give Them a Chance.
That is to say, your lungs. Also all your breathing machinery. Very wonderful machinery it is. Not only the larger air passages, but the thousands of little tubes and cavities leading from them.
When these are clogged and choked with matter which ought not to be there, your lungs cannot half do their work. And what they do they cannot do well.
Call it cold, cough, croup, pneumonia, catarrh, consumption or any of the family of throat and nose and head and lung obstructions, all are bad. All ought to be got rid of. There is just one sure way to get rid of them. That is to take Boschee's German Syrup, which any druggist will sell you at 75 cents a bottle. Even if everything else had failed you, you may depend upon this for certain.

[Entered as Second Class mail matter.]

Ex-Gov. Morrill is slowly sinking.

Notice the summer arrangement of the B. and S. R. Railroad in another column.

Robert D. was sold, after the trot at Canton last week, to Boston parties. The price is said to be $600.

We have received a copy of the second edition of "Mount Desert with Pen and Pencil" by Dr. W. B. Lapham. It contains 64 pages of interesting matter.

Wm. F. Smith, 51 years old, general passenger agent of the Grand Trunk railroad, died suddenly while sitting at his desk Monday morning in his office; cause not ascertained.

The business of Elliott & Bartlett of Lynchville is to be increased. More improved spool making machines are shortly to be put in operation. They are running their mill on full time and have plenty of orders.

There will be sold at public auction at the residence of the late Oliver Porter, Waterford, July 9th, at 10 o'clock, a. m., the personal property of said estate, consisting of two open buggies, sleigh, ten tons hay, hemlock and bass lumber, farming tools, household goods, etc. Geo. A. Cole, Auctioneer.

Hon. C. E. Gibbs successfully launched his new steamer, the Nathaniel Hawthorne, at Bridgton, Saturday morning. She is designed for the Sebago Lake route and is especially adapted to pleasure travel. She will commence her regular trips between Harrison, Bridgton and Sebago Lake, traversing the sinuous Songo, early in July.

HEBRON.

The baccalaureate sermon delivered by Rev. C. C. Tilley of Lewiston, before the graduating class Sunday was excellent. A large audience was present. The quartette rendered some fine music. A large crowd attended the commencement exercises. The stage was prepared on the campus and was beautifully draped with flags and decorated. At 2 o'clock Wednesday the class were seated in front of the stage and the following program was well rendered.

Salutatory, The Future of Canada,
Ellery C. Park, Mexico.
Try Again. Fannie E. Denning, Me. Falls.
The American Navy. Fred E. Foster, Buckfield.
Darkness Brings Out the Stars.
May I. Stearns, Paris.

Conferring of Diplomas.

In the evening a large number attended the concert. The class held an alumni meeting and elected the following officers: President, Ellery C. Park; vice president, Chas. W. Skillings; secretary, Abbie S. Jordan; treasurer, Wallace E. Day; committee of arrangements, Fred Marshall, Alice Merrill, Irene King, Percy Lowell and Alton Hibbs.

Mrs. Emma Whitney and son, Leon, with her hired girl and a lady friend from Boston, arrived Friday afternoon to stay through the summer.

E. M. Glover has had five new horse stalls made in his barn, and prepared to accomodate as many horses as possible commencement week.

Judge Bonny and wife, of Portland, were here visiting during commencement week.

Bradford Sturtevant raised his barn Saturday afternoon.

Mrs. Watkins has been visiting at C. E. Tripp's.

Dr. Dunham has commenced work on his house.

EAST FRYEBURG.

Prayer meetings in the school house every Tuesday evening; and on the hill every Sunday afternoon.

J. L. Chapman has accepted an agency for H. Ladd's new publication, the sale of which is steadily increasing.

Maud Blaisdell is teaching school at the Falls.

R. A. Grover will close his steam mill for a few weeks in July.

Joel L. Merrill is the happy father of a baby boy.

L. K. Anderson is shingling his barn.

The high water of the past week has made good river driving but poor fishing.

DIXFIELD.

Last week while Gene Stephens, Fannie and Adam Simpson of East Rumford were on their way to Dixfield, their horse took fright, shying to one side, overturning the wagon, throwing them out and hurting them quite badly. The horse was got under control after he had broken the wagon and harness considerably.

We had the biggest rainfall here last week that had been known for years at this season of the year—the river rose over four feet.

The river drivers went by Friday on high tide.

W. S. Marble had his carriage stove up in Minot last week by a kicking horse that he hired.

G. H. Newman lost two colts last week; cause unknown.

M. Holman at the Center has his new house up, boarded and shingled.

D. F. Newton is making cheese at the factory with about 1,100 lbs. of milk.

The boat went off Thursday on account of high water.

HARTFORD.

Apples blossomed fairly well, but very few have set and the crop will be very light.

The temperance celebration to be held in Hartford on the shore of Lake Whitney July 4th, promises to eclipse anything of the kind ever held in eastern Oxford. Special trains will run on the R. F. & B. railroad, and many speakers of national reputation will be there.

NORTH WEST BETHEL.

M. Penley came to the front with green peas and new potatoes, the 24th of June.

Ann Rowe made a short visit to this place last week.

S. Mason is cutting poplar. He has a man by the name of McCloud helping him.

Andrew Twitchel is quite smart for such an old man. We saw him out hoeing the other day.

SNOW'S FALLS.

A. A. Parker and family moved to Bethel last week. Mr. Barker and two sons are in the employ of J. H. Barrows, the eldest son remaining at West Paris with J. Wayland Kimball.

Chandler Curtis of South Woodstock purchased the farm lately owned by his son, Wm. H., and is cutting the hay on it. He will move here in the fall.

Geo. F. Robinson is away selling chairs for O. P. Ellingwood & Co.

Mrs. C. D. Cordwell and children spent last week in Greenwood at her father's, Nelson Jackson's.

Mrs. John Black who has been very ill is improving.

WEST PARIS.

The village school closed last Friday, the 24th, with a school exhibition at Dunham's Opera House in the evening, which consisted of declamations, recitations, select reading, dialogues, music, tableaux, etc., and concluded with the roaring farce entitled the "Grecian Bend." The hall was filled at an early hour, and those late in their arrival, like your correspondent was glad to get standing room. On account of the lateness of my arrival I am unable to give any particulars of the first part of the entertainment. The tableaux were well selected, and with the aid of the finely dressed young ladies and the red lights gave a splendid appearance upon the stage. The declamations and recitations were finely executed and showed a large amount of labor and care on the part of teacher and scholars. The recitation by Eva Stuart "The School-master's Guests" was just magnificent. With a little stronger voice Miss Stuart would be a very fine elocutionist. The whistling solo by Miss Jennie Dunham was superb and encored by the large audience as she richly deserved. The negro song by Fannie and Gennie Dunham entitled "Oh! we's so very wicked," was well sung and acted and brought down the house with applause and was several times encored. The select reading by Rosa Ray was very fine. The song by Eva Stuart and Rosa Ray, "Drifting into the Harbor" was well executed. The recitation by the teacher, Dora York, entitled "Little Will," was well spoken and the moral of the subject was excellent. The exhibition closed by the roaring farce entitled "The Grecian Bend" and a fine tableau entitled "The Flower Girls." Eva Stuart personated to perfection the old lady and Fannie Dunham took the cake as a take off on the Grecian Bend which bought down the house with applause. It is a great shame that young men should be so forgetful of good manners and their own credit (if they have any) to go to such a place to disturb a civil entertainment. We hope it will not occur again. The exhibition did great credit to both teacher and scholars. Miss York has taught a very successful term of school here this spring and has given excellent satisfaction to both parents and scholars and has proved herself a first-class teacher. We regret very much that we could not have secured Miss York as teacher of the fall term.

C. H. Lane has his new store completed and moved into the store Monday the 27th inst.

John Andrews' new hardware store is nearly completed and will soon be fitted up with hardware, agricultural implements, etc., besides a large stock of stoves and tin ware. Already the outside is being well decorated with fine painted signs.

Mrs. Mary Bucknam is to open a first-class drug store in the store recently occupied by C. H. Lane. Mrs. Bucknam is a registered druggist and has had considerable experience as a druggist.

Mrs. Solon Ryerson, who recently had her nose amputated for removal of cancer, has made a good convalescence. The wound has nearly healed.

P. B. Atkinson lately raised by subscription a good sum of money for the Band.

Perley Andrews is instructing the West Paris Band. The Band has lately purchased ten dollars worth of new music. Mr. Atkinson as well as Mr. Andrews has the sincere thanks of the Band as well as the citizens of our village for their kindness and efforts for the interest of our Band.

Daniel Young, aged 87 years, died at the residence of his son, Newell Young, last Saturday.

Albion Bucknam has sold out his meat business to James Brooks and Samuel Caldwell. The old market has been cleaned up, painted, new tables put in and everythings looks clean and tidy. Messrs. Brooks & Caldwell buy mostly Western beef at present until stock in the pastures have improved in flesh. Mr. Bucknam is to go into the grocery business in the rear of the store recently occupied by C. H. Lane.

What we need now is to have the road leading from West Paris to Trap Corner, so called, straightened and made wider, with shade trees. This would open up many pleasant and desirable building lots, and this mile of road would be one of the pleasantest and most beautiful roads in the town if not in the county, and would soon be settled. Who will make a move in the matter?

Our people are still hugging that delusive phantom of hope that there is no danger from fire in our village notwithstanding the fearful experiences of other villages all around us. Our tinder box of wooden building unprotected as it is by any fire department or other means to combat the fire fiend, when it once gets started is liable to be wiped out any time. Daniel Curtis, living in the midst of our village, has not one cent of insurance on his property and has not had for many years. I presume we must have our own experience and like other places lock the door after the horse is stolen.

We have now one of the finest horse shoers in the county in the person of David Emmons, who lately came here from Philadelphia and occupies the Whittemore shop and is having all the work he can do.

Mrs. Hattie Brooks is one of our most successful dressmakers and is doing a large business.

F. A. Young came near losing a valuable cow Sunday evening by falling into a well. It was some time before the cow could be got out. When out of the well no bones were found broken. Otherwise than badly bruised and chilled it was thought the cow was all right.

I. F. Emmons has his store well under way.

S. W. Dunham is soon to build a nice cottage for F. Scott, station agent.

F. J. Caldwell of the Maple House has his house well filled with boarders.

And now the enterprising little village of West Paris has waked up to Home protection and under the leadership of Mrs. Estes have formed another lodge of Good Templars named "Golden Rule." Will meet Thursday eve. The officers are as follows: L. D. G. C. T., H. G. Brown; C. T., A. E. Clark; V. T., Miss E. A. Swan; Chap., J. C. Andrews; Sec., Mrs. A. M. Andrews; F. S., J. C. Edgerly; Treas., S. W. Dunham; M., L. Stewart; Guard, Gertie M. Swan; Sen., C. A. Stetson; P. C. T., A. G. Brown; A. Sec., H. E. Andrews; R. H. S., Jennie M. Dunham; L. H. S., H. A. Hammond; Dep. M., Fannie F. Dunham.

LOVELL.

The dowel mill of S. H. Harriman is shut down owing to the breaking of the driving rod of the engine.

Oliver Chapman of Lynn and Mrs. Mary Page of Porter have been visiting friends here.

The farmers are beginning their haying now. The crop is good but somewhat late.

F. C. Russell and Aretas Stearns are at home from Bowdoin.

Benjamin Heald is very low now. He has been sick, requiring watchers every night since last September.

Mason H. Andrews of Norway is in town trying to give some one a good trade in a carriage.

Asa B. Harriman, the collector of taxes, has his list now and proposes to collect a few dollars while he sells some medicine and extracts.

D. W. True who has clerked quite a number of years for Walker & Bell has closed his connection with them. He will be missed much in the store, where he has dispensed groceries and dry goods to almost everybody in this region.

SWEDEN.

Isaac Eastman died June 16th, aged 84 years. On the following Sabbath funeral services were held at the family mansion conducted by Rev. J. Robinson, pastor of the M. E. church in this town, who gave an appropriate and earnest discourse from Rev. 14th chapter and 13th verse. Mr. Eastman has been a working member of the Congregational church in this place, and a good man. He leaves five children, four sons and a daughter behind, while he has gone to join his companion and children who passed on to the promised land long ago. Mr. Eastman has been most kindly cared for in the family of his son Aaron for many years; and the untiring devotion of Mr. and Mrs. Eastman for the comfort and happiness of their aged father will be rewarded by him who seeth all things.

A large congregation and an excellent discourse at the M. E. church last Sabbath.

The steam mill is now ready to run.

D. T. Adams has lately bought two cows, for which he paid one hundred dollars, and he now has a good looking herd for dairying purposes. Keep them well, Daniel, and they will pay well.

E. W. Bennett sold his black colt some weeks ago for one hundred and sixty dollars. We hear it has again changed owners at one hundred and seventy-five. It was a good colt.

The road machine has done very good work in all the districts where it has been run. There is some muttering of course about its cost, and the big team it takes to run it, etc., but good roads are never complained about. It is the rough ones that bring out the big, bad words.

The summer term of school in district No. 7 closed last Saturday. It was a short but very profitable term. Miss Pendexter, considering her limited experience is a very good teacher.

Charles W. Bennett has a span of well matched two years old colts. They are red in color with good points.

WELCHVILLE.

The Knights of Labor held a fair on Friday eve last which netted them a little over fifty dollars. After the fair came dancing. All seemed to have a splendid time.

Children's Sunday was observed in this place at the M. E. Church, Rev. J. M. Buffum presiding. Everything passed off in good shape. The exercises were good and the children did their parts splendidly.

R. F. Staples, one of our selectmen, has been very sick with rheumatic fever, but is some better at the present time.

Rev. J. M. Buffum left this place on Monday morning last and rumor has it that he is to bring home a bride.

The Harper Co. are making some repairs on the house known as the Harper house. HAMILTON.

NORWAY LAKE.

W. W. Pride has taken down his old stable between the house and barn and is putting up a new one in its stead 24x32 feet. Frank T. Green is doing the work.

Mrs. C. W. Partridge arrived home from her trip to Mass. and N. H. on Monday and looks much benefited.

The puffing and whistling of the steamers is heard at almost any hour of the day now.

Nellie Walker, who has been staying with relatives at Fryeburg for a number of months, is at home again.

The great event on the lake on Thursday was the diving for the cornet. A crowd went up in boats and on the steamers.

The rains of late have assured an abundant hay crop.

J. F. Bradbury has scythes, snaths, rakes, forks, etc., that he wants the farmers to have to secure their large crop of hay with and will sell them at a small profit so that all can have new implements. J. L. Partridge has a stock of haying tools of all kinds which the farmers are in need of to make haying trim, easy, pleasant and profitable.

The highway from this place to Norway city is rough, rollicking, rocky, ridgy and ragged, all worn out, dangerous to the traveling public and a disgrace to every citizen of the town who has a spark of pride. Conundrum: If it costs $73 per mile a year to have poor roads in Norway, what would it cost to support good roads?

On Saturday last some person took ½ dozen scythe snaths from the depot at Norway belonging to J. F. Bradbury. If said person will return them to the depot or to the owner they may have one for their trouble.

Mrs. Geo. B. Dunham came very near losing her eye sight on Tuesday. In putting some concentrated lye in a bottle it flew back and struck her full in the eyes. Mr. Dunham was fortunately in the room and applied cold water at once. She is suffering very much and may lose the sight of one eye.

NORTH WATERFORD.

Sylvester Jackson has moved to Conway, N. H.

Mrs. Wm. Martin has been on a visit to N. H.

Solomon Heald and wife of Fryeburg are visiting their daughter, Mrs. J. D. Horr.

John Welch of Bangor is stopping at Benjamin Jackson's. NED.

GILEAD.

True Spears has him a set of Chamberlin's Encyclopædias. They are a nice work.

Alice Hicks is in town. She accompanied her grandmother up from South Paris.

Geo. Bryant, Ed. Holt and a friend from Bethel spent Sunday in town a short time ago.

May Peabody and Fred Coffin are now home from their schools.

D. F. Goodnoe died on the 22d ult. about 11 o'clock in the evening. Deceased came to an early death by jumping on board of a special freight which was passing westward about 4 o'clock, p. m., at a rate of speed not exceeding 10 miles per hour. At the upper end of the yard he jumped off the front end of the van, losing his hold he doubled and fell under, the hind trucks passing over both legs between the knee and ankles. The train stopped at once and the conductor concluded to take him to Gorham for medical aid, as it would be some time before aid could be got from Bethel. Doctors were telegraphed for to meet the wounded man on arrival of the train at Gorham. Although retaining consciousness until after getting to Gorham he gradually failed and all efforts to get a reaction of the pulse failed and no operation could be performed. On further examination it was found that the left leg was shattered to the hip and amputation of one leg at the hip joint and the other above the knee would be necessary. It was thought best to return him on the first train which they did, arriving at 7.30, p. m., he gradually sinking but apparently suffering but little pain. E. B. Goddard, Coroner from Bethel, was telegraphed for next morning, who came and empanelled a jury. Decision that Goodnoe came to his death by act of his own carelessness; company exonerated. Goodnoe was employed in the mill by J. W. Bennett, aged about 35. A subscription paper was quickly started and $60 collected. He leaves a wife and one child. Funeral Friday last at 10 o'clock, J. H. Trask officiating.

Esther Peabody is visiting at Portland for a short time.

I understand Mrs. Eli Richardson is very sick.

Mrs. Ella Harwood is visiting her mother, Mrs. A. D. Hodgman. MUNN.

EAST STONEHAM.

Mrs. John Littlefield has just arrived home from Bryant's Pond where she has been visiting her relatives.

Mrs. Geo. W. Speers of this town, late State Chaplin of W. S. R. C. has gone to Auburn to attend the State Convention, from which she intends to visit her relatives at the Poland Springs House and vicinity.

School at Lynchville Four Corners continues one week longer. We learn that this school is making fine progress, being taught by Georgia Durgin of Lovell. Miss Durgin is an experienced teacher and well adapted to the business. She has taught many schools in this town and vicinity with remarkable success.

Mrs. Abbie Pratt and children and Gertie Jackman from Saccarappa are visiting their relatives in this town.

People are making preparations for Fourth of July celebration to be held at North Waterford. A good time is anticipated.

LOCKE'S MILLS.

Asa Stearns had five horses arrive on the cars and C. M. Wormell, Bethel, one. They were fine looking horses.

Ava Crockett of Lisbon is at D. M. Goss'. She goes to Jackson, N. H., to visit her uncle, Rev. C. T. D. Crockett.

Mrs. Rhoda Whitman is on the sick list.

I made a call at Hiram Young's harness shop last Saturday, corner of Main and Broad Street, Bethel. He has fitted up his shop in good shape. He has a nice lot of harnesses and all other goods pertaining to horses outfit. He has lately put in a lot of riding saddles bought in the West.

E. E. Rand has sold rising eight hundred dollars worth of hay this spring. E. E. Rand and wife start on a trip to Augusta this week with his team.

We had a call from George Ayer last Saturday, who has been attending school at Hebron Academy. He speaks highly of the school. B.

Last Sunday was Children's Day at the church. There was a good floral display and the church about the pulpit presented a fine appearance. The services were conducted by Rev. C. M. Emery who is working in the interest of Hebron Academy, who illustrated his remarks for the benefit of the children in a very able manner. The concert under the supervision of the Superintendent, Charles Lapham, was very entertaining. The declamations, recitations and select reading were rendered in a manner that showed well for the school, the blending of the voices of the birds from the different cages in the church with that of the school choir was very entertaining. Mr. Emery held an evening meeting which was also well attended.

Rev. Mr. Pease of Boston will preach at the church here on Sunday next at two o'clock in the afternoon. B.

Master Harry Jordan has got one of those Indian ponies from Mr. Bean.

BRYANT'S POND.

Freeman Godwin and Rob Jacobs visited a trout brook in Gilead one day last week where they caught about five hundred fine trout.

Many will begin haying next Tuesday morning.

A board nail was taken from the foot of a nice colt belonging to Ezekiel Jackson last week. The animal had been lame for several weeks and at last got so he could not touch his foot to the ground.

Newell Rowe is gaining. CLINTON.

BUCKFIELD.

Virgil P. DeCoster has an excellent farm and is one of the best farmers in the county of Oxford. He keeps a large stock of cattle and sheep and raises good crops. Last year 400 bushels of yellow corn was grown on his farm. Ten years ago a nursery was started from the seed, and now has apple trees that are bearing. Seven hundred thrifty trees in all have been set out on the farm from the nursery. The trees are grafted in the trunk or limb as it is thought best, but limb grafting Mr. D. considers the better method.

Mrs. Ozin Spaulding has a pencil sketch of Buckfield village as it was about fifty years ago. It was made by Miss Olivia Record, a descendent of Lieut. Dominicus Record, one of the first settlers. Mr. Spaulding says there isn't a poor house or a poor neighbor on his street. It is one of the prettiest streets in the county. Who intimates that Buckfield is not a good place to live in?

Large quantities of corn and grain are purchased at the mill by the farmers throughout this section.

Crops are looking finely. They were never better at this season of the year.

H. W. Whitman was offered $225. for his oxen the other day and he didn't take it. They are the largest cattle in this part of the state and measure over eight feet.

A large number of our people will go to Canton on the 4th of July to attend the celebration.

SOUTH WATERFORD.

F. F. Horr has his barn on the Grant place completed.

Only one end of the the Town has got life enough to announce a celebration on the "Glorious Fourth." The north part will celebrate in a fitting manner.

School in this district closes on Friday of the present week and all are agreed that it has been a profitable term. There will now be a vacation until about Sept. 1st.

Mrs. Haynes, daughter of J. C. Gerry, has been in town for about two weeks but has now returned home. She sails for Europe on July 5th.

Walter K. Hamlin has built an addition to his stable and otherwise improved his buildings (the Perry stand). He will soon have his cards in excellent condition and be ready for wool.

Frank A. Noble has as nice a piece of grass as we have seen about here this season. He will commence haying this week.

We understand that our New York fisherman is in town and we shall therefore be prepared at any time to cook a dinner of bass. Certain we are that he will capture them for he is a true disciple of Walton.

LYNCHVILLE.

Mrs. Amy E. Guptill has gone to Lewiston on a visit.

Most of the people in this vicinity are cutting poplar.

We understand that Geo. W. Beckler intends put up a house near his barn this summer. MYSTIC.

Mrs. Edmund Manze, an elderly lady of this neighborhood who had her hip broken a few weeks ago, remains about the same.

Daniel Morrill, son of Thomas Morrill, cut his foot very badly last week. JIM.

An End to Bone Scraping.

Edward Shepherd, of Harrisburg, Ill., says: "Having received so much benefit from Electric Bitters, I feel it my duty to let suffering humanity know it. Have had a running sore on my leg for eight years; my doctors told me I would have to have the bone scraped or my leg amputated. I used, instead, three bottles of Electric Bitters and seven boxes of Bucklen's Arnica Salve, and my leg is now sound and well." Electric Bitters are sold at fifty cents a bottle, and Bucklen's Arnica Salve at 25 cents a box, at Noyes' Drug Store.

DENMARK.

C. B. Smith and wife have been on a visit to relatives in Baldwin.

Stephen Jewett says he has not planted his early potatoes yet but means to this week.

Planting, hoeing and haying all the same week. Some of the farmers begin haying this week but the majority will begin Monday, July 4th, if good weather. There being no celebration nearer than Fryeburg or Porter they will fire a salute in the morning and then go into the hay fields.

Geo. P. Bennett was up from Standish last week. He took back with him a very nice bull calf that he bought of Stephen Ames, paying twenty dollars.

The past week being cloudy and rainy afforded the fisherman good chance to go fishing. Among the largest strings caught were by Wallace Richardson and Clarence Bragdon. They caught seventy-six pickerel and all good size.

Mrs. Rufus Bennett and her father, Isaiah Cheney, have been on a short visit to Springvale.

GREENWOOD.

We hear Annie Kingsley broke her wrist the other day.

We hear C. Bryant, our foreman on the town farm, has bought a mowing machine and horse rake.

N. M. Small has the largest field of corn we have seen.

We give it as our opinion, we get the largest hay crop for years in this vicinity.

Charles Bryant and A. E. Morgan cut and peeled fifty poplar trees one day last week and the most of them were large ones.

We picked ten ripe strawberries on one stem, all good ones.

That Tired Feeling

The warm weather has a debilitating effect, especially upon those who are within doors most of the time. The peculiar, yet common, complaint known as "that tired feeling," is the result. This feeling can be entirely overcome by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which gives new life and strength to all the functions of the body.

"I could not sleep; had no appetite. I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and soon began to sleep soundly; could get up without that tired and languid feeling; and my appetite improved." R. A. SANFORD, Kent, Ohio.

Strengthen the System

Hood's Sarsaparilla is characterized by three peculiarities: 1st, the combination of remedial agents; 2d, the proportion; 3d, the process of securing the active medicinal qualities. The result is a medicine of unusual strength, effecting cures hitherto unknown. Send for book containing additional evidence.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla tones up my system, purifies my blood, sharpens my appetite, and seems to make me over." J. P. THOMPSON, Register of Deeds, Lowell, Mass.

"Hood's Sarsaparilla beats all others, and is worth its weight in gold." I. BARRINGTON, 130 Bank Street, New York City.

F. Q. ELLIOTT,

The So. Paris Clothier,

Has something to say this week to all that take the ADVERTISER, and to those that borrow it, and to all that read this valuable paper, what he knows about the Clothing Business.

He has had a little experience, having been in this kind of business some over 10 years, and as yet have always paid 100 cents on the dollar. One thing why so many make failures, in his opinion, is in not buying well—do not buy good goods at Low Prices. He has always made a rule to buy his clothing, &c., when he could get the most value for his money; that's the secret of the whole business.

Now he wants all to understand that the Old Stock he bought of E. & S., May 14th, 1887, since that sale, he has disposed of and bought over $3,000 worth of

FINE READY-MADE CLOTHING,

HATS, CAPS and FURNISHINGS for Men's and Boy's wear, in all the latest styles, and at ROCK BOTTOM PRICES for cash. You can find in this large stock of Clothing anything you want, from a

A Portland diver was employed to explore the bottom of the Lake in quest of the lost cornet last Tuesday afternoon. The search was unsuccessful owing to the great depth of mud at the bottom. Mr. George Floyd, the diver, reported the mud to be from 3 to 5 feet deep. The diver explored between two and three miles of lake bottom. He staid unders water an hour and three minutes. He found an ax and lantern that belonged to the capsized boat and this was all. Mr. Floyd said there was no rock in that part of the lake and he saw no fish or eels. Capt. Woodsum and steamer had charge of the diver and apparatus. Some twenty boat loads of spectators including Capt. H. Cole with the Dabster witnessed the diving exploits. The search was given up as useless.

A. P. Bassett has fitted up his store on Main Street in palacial elegance. The dining room is furnished with numerous stalls, with marble tables, and everything is in fine shape. In the front store he sells fruit, confectionery, nuts, tobacco, cigars, etc. He can furnish meals to regular boarders and it is a fine place for the fellows to take their girls for ice-cream.

We are shortly to make an examination of the road bills paid in this town, both labor and money for the year closing Jan'y 31, 1887, and if possible get at the exact amount of money expended in repairing and breaking roads for that time. There seems to be a wide difference of opinion. Chairman D. S. Sanborn informs us that the cost per mile was about $35, and if this is so we shall most gladly inform the dear people of it, notwithstanding the amount raised as shown by their report.

Visit of Oxford Bears.

The Oxford Bear Association of Portland visited Norway Wednesday. It was their annual excursion into the land of their nativity. Some 250 members of the Association were present. They were met at the depot by the Norway committee of arrangements and were escorted to the Beal's House. They were accompanied by Chandler's band of Portland.

The visiting Bears were taken through the principal street of the village and were conveyed to the top of Pike hill via of Norway Lake in two and four horse barges.

Dinner was served in Norway Hall by Commodore A. K. Paul of the Beal's House. Some 300 partook of dinner.

The address of welcome to the visiting Bears was made by S. S. Stearns, Esq., and was as follows:—

MR. PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE OXFORD BEAR ASSOCIATION.—It is with feelings of great pleasure that I extend to you to-day on behalf of the citizens of this good old town of Norway a heartfelt welcome to our midst. Last September we welcomed home a host of the sons and daughters of Norway who came to celebrate with us the one hundredth anniversary of the settlement of the town. To-day we welcome some of those same sons and daughters and we welcome as warmly the sons and daughters of Norway's sister towns. We know no difference between her own sons and daughters and her nephews and nieces, if I may be allowed so to term those of you who did not have the fortune to be born within our boundary lines. We welcome you as members of the same family, as representatives of that sterling blood of old Oxford County to which every state in this great nation of ours and almost every town is deeply indebted; but I understand that no extended address of welcome at this time would be fitting. Your early start, your journey hither, and what you have gone through with since your arrival must have given you an appetite for something more substantial than wind. In fact perhaps the most pleasing welcome I could give you would be to follow the example of that worthy brother of the church, who wishing to keep up the practice of nightly prayers with the least trouble to himself posted the Lord's prayer in his room and when ready to pray pointed at it saying, "Those are my sentiments, Lord." So I might point to these tables simply saying, "These are our sentiments of welcome." Mr. President, again welcoming you and your associates to our midst, I place these tables, this Hall and ourselves at your service.

Divine blessing was invoked by Rev. Dr. A. K. P. Small of Portland. The after dinner speeches were amusing and interesting. Vice President Byron G. Verrell acted as chairman of the exercises and a happy speech of introduction in which he extends thanks for Norway's hospitality and generosity. He called upon Mayor Chapman, of Portland who responded with a characteristic speech abounding in good sense and practical utility. The "New South" was represented by Hon. H. I. Kimball of Atlanta, Ga., in a very happy off hand speech in which he claimed that the Oxford Bear Engine Co., organized in this village some 30 odd years ago was the only and original Oxford Bear Association. He extended a hearty welcome to the Portland Association. Judge Geo A. Wilson was called upon as brevet governor of Maine, and reponded in a handy speech that was well appreciated by the audience. Dr. Seth C. Gordon of Portland made remarks which pleased all in the hall, and Hon. John P. Swasey of Canton when called upon made a ringing speech in behalf of the resident sons and daughters of Old Oxford County. The speech was well received. W. H. Ripley of Portland was the poet, his verses were good.

The symbol of the Association was on the stage. It was a well mounted stuffed Oxford Black Bear. The tables were finely decorated with flowers and an excellent dinner was served by Caterer Paul and everything passed off pleasantly. The services were interspersed with band music.

The newspaper fraternity was well represented. We noticed the following; Hon. John M. Adams of the Argus, E. S. Osgood of the same paper; Giles O. Bailey of the Sunday Times; P. G. Dingley of the Lewiston Journal; A. E. Forbes, Oxford Democrat, and Geo. H. Watkins, former publisher of that paper.

Among the prominent Bears were Geo. F. Emery, Chas. J. Walker, Gen. Agent Boothby, Rev. Dr. Sewall, J. V. Winslow, Chas. D. Brown, A. L. Burbank, P. C. Manning, J. J. Perry and many others.

Probably the Association will visit Canton next year.

Newell Foster is at home. He recently had a narrow escape from death. He was at work in the stone quarry at Litchfield, driving the four ox team that hauls the stone to the depot. As they happened to be short of help he took hold to help unload. Suddenly as a 3,300 pound stone was being raised by the derrick, the chain broke and the great stone fell so nearly upon Mr. Foster that it scraped part of the legs off the front part of his pants and tore one shoe off his foot and fairly ground the shoe to powder. Fortunately Mr. Foster escaped with a few bruises and a badly but not seriously jammed foot. He now goes around upon crutches, but the foot is rapidly improving. The stone company continue his pay while he is disabled.

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

EDITED BY G. W. BROWN, M. D.

Diarrhœa and Feeding-Bottles.

One of the commonest causes of diarrhœa, nasty, persistant diarrhœa, that resists treatment, is the use of the bottle. Yet it should not be so; it is not a necessary accompaniment of the bottle.

But the majority of mothers are careless about keeping the bottle clean. Two bottles should be always in use. When one is emptied it should be well washed in hot water, thoroughly rinsed, and allowed to stand full of warm water, into which a small piece of washing soda has been introduced, until required for use, when it should be again well rinsed.

Long nursing-tubes are abominations, and form ready nests for the propagation of disease germs. We should employ the ordinary rubber nipple, without any tube, and having several on hand, those not in actual use should be kept soaking in water and soda. If we have good milk, that has not soured, and if we observe these simple precautions, we will soon cure these obstinate diarrhœas without drugs.

Miraculous Escape.

W. W. Reed, druggist, of Winchester, Ind., writes: "One of my customers, Mrs. Louisa Pike, Bartonia, Randolph Co., Ind., was a long sufferer with Consumption and was given up to die by her physicians. She heard of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, and began buying it of me. In six months time she walked to this city, a distance of six miles, and is now so much improved her has quit using it. She feels she owes her life to it." Free Trial Bottles at Noyes' Drug Store.

Lines.

BY MRS. ELLIOT SMITH.

Rest, rest, weary pilgrim, thy journey is done
The last darksome earth-cloud has veiled thy life's sun;
Thy o'erweary feet will be weary no more,
Where angels walk with thee on you blissful shore.

We miss from life's pathway a dignified form,
The clasp of a hand that in friendship was warm,
A sweet smile of gladness, bland words giv-en to cheer,
That came like sweet music on memories ear.

Rest, dearly beloved one! So peaceful thy sleep—
Oh, why should we murmur, or why should we weep?
Thou hast past the dark vale, through the beautiful gate
To the city of God, while we wander and wait.

A great light shines out from that city of Love,
Blending all of earth's grief-tears with rain-bows above;
Its glory refulgent lights Death's waters o'er,
From robes of beloved ones who've passed on before.

Through dark clouds and shadows we follow along,
With tearful-eyed vision we see the bright throng;
Of white robed archangels who roll back the door,
And enter there into Life evermore.

JESS.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD,

Author of "King Solomon's Mines" &c. &c.

"Jess, dear Jess, pray stop; I can't bear to see you so."

She lifted her head from his shoulder and stood looking at him, her hand resting on the table behind her. Her face was wet with tears and looked like a dew washed lily, and her beautiful eyes were dim with a flame that he had never seen in the eyes of woman before. She said nothing, but her whole face was more eloquent than any words, for there are times when the features can convey a message in a language of their own that is more subtle than any tongue we talk. There she stood, her breast heaving with emotion as the sea heaves when the fierceness of the storm has passed—a very incarnation of the intensest love of woman. And as she stood something seemed to pass before her eyes and blind her, and a spirit took possession of her that absorbed all her doubts and fears, and she gave way to a force that was of her and yet compelled her, as, when the wind blows, the sails compel a ship. And then, for the first time, where her love was concerned, she put out all her strength. She knew, and had always known, that she could master him, and force him to regard her as she regarded him, did she but choose. How she knew is she could not say, but so it was. And now she yielded to an overmastering impulse and chose. She said nothing, she did not even move, she only looked at him.

"Why were you in such a fright about me?" he stammered.

She did not answer, but kept her eyes upon his face, and it seemed to John as though power flowed from them; for, as she looked, he felt the change come. Everything melted away before the almost spiritual intensity of her gaze. Passion, love, his engagement—all were forgotten; the smouldering embers broke into flame, and he knew that he loved this woman as he had never loved any living creature before—that he loved her even as she loved him. Strong man as he was he shook like a leaf before her.

"Jess," he said, hoarsely, "God forgive me! I love you!" and he bent forward to kiss her.

She lifted her face toward him, then suddenly changed her mind, and laid her hand upon his breast.

"You forget," she said, almost solemnly, "your are going to marry Bessie."

Overpowered by a deep sense of shame, and by another sense of the deep calamity that had overtaken him, John turned and limped from the house.

CHAPTER XVIII.

AND AFTER.

In front of the door of "The Palatial" was a round flower bed filled with weeds and flowers mixed up together like the good and evil in the heart of man, and to the right hand side of this bed stood an old wooden chair with the back off. No sooner had John got outside the door of the cottage than he became sensible that, what between one thing and another—weariness, loss of blood from his wound, and intense mental emotion—if he did not sit down somewhere pretty quickly he should follow the example set by Jess and faint straight away. Accordingly he made for the old chair and perched himself on it with gratitude. Presently he saw Mrs. Neville coming steaming along the path with a bottle of brandy in her hand.

"Ah!" he thought to himself, "that will just come in handy for me. If I don't have a glass of brandy soon I shall roll off this infernal chair—I am sure of it."

"Where is Jess?" panted Mrs. Neville.

"In there," he said; "she has recovered. It would be better for us both if she hadn't," he added to himself.

"Why, bless me, Capt. Niel, how queer you look!" said Mrs. Neville, fanning herself with her hat," and there is such a row going on at the camp there. The volunteers swear that they will attack the military for deserting them, and I don't know what all; and they simply wouldn't believe me when I said you were not shot. Why, I never! Look! your boot is full of blood! So you were hit after all."

"Might I trouble you to give me some brandy, Mrs. Neville?" said John, faintly.

She filled a glass she had brought with her half full of water from a little irrigation furrow that ran down from the mains, sluiced the road, and then topped it up with brandy. He drank it, and felt decidedly better.

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Neville, "there are a pair of you now. You should just have seen that girl go down when she saw the body coming along the road! I made sure that it was you; but it wasn't. They say that it was poor Jim Smith, son of old Smith of Rustenburg. I tell you what it is, Capt. Niel, you had better be careful; if that girl isn't in love with you, she is something very like it. A girl does not pop over like that for Dick, Tom or Harry. You must forgive an old woman like me for speaking out plain, but she is an odd girl is Jess, just like ten women rolled into one so far as her mind goes, and if you don't take care you will get into trouble, which will be rather awkward, as you are going to marry her sister. Jess isn't a girl to have a bit of a flirt to pass away the time and have done with it, I can tell you;" and she shook her head solemnly, as though she suspected him of trifling with his future sister in law's young affections, and then, without waiting for an answer, turned and went into the cottage.

As for John, he only groaned. What could he do but groan? The whole thing was self evident, and if ever a man felt ashamed of himself that man was John Niel. He was a strictly honorable individual, and it cut him to the heart to think that he had entered on a course which was not honorable, considering his engagement to Bessie. When he, a few minutes before, had told Jess he loved her he had said a disgraceful thing, however true a thing it might be, that was the worst of it; it was true; he did love her. He felt it come sweeping over him like a wave as she stood there looking at him in the room, utterly drowning and overpowering his affection for Bessie, to whom he was bound by every tie of honor. It was a new and wonderful thing, this passion that had arisen within him, as a strong man armed, and driven every other affection away into the waste places of his mind; and, unfortunately, it was on overmastering and, as he already guessed, an enduring thing. He cursed himself in his shame and anger as he sat there recovering his equilibrium on the broken chair and tying a handkerchief tight round his wound. What a fool he had been! Why had he not waited to see which of the two he really took to? Why had Jess gone away like that and thrown him into temptation with her pretty sister? He was sure now that she had cared for him all along. Well, there it was, and a precious bad business too! One thing he was clear about; it should go no further. He was not going to break his engagement to Bessie; it was not to be thought of. But, all the same, he felt sorry for himself and sorry for Jess too.

Just then, however, the bandage on his leg slipped, and the wound began to bleed so fast that he was fain to limp into the house for assistance.

Jess, who had apparently quite got over her agitation, was standing by the table talking to Mrs. Neville, who was persuading her to swallow some of the brandy she had been at such pains to fetch. The moment she caught sight of John's face, which had now turned ghastly white, and saw the red line trickling down his boot, she took up her hat that was lying on the table.

"You had better lie down on the old bedstead in the little room," she said; "I am going for the doctor."

Assisted by Mrs. Neville, he was only too glad to take this advice, but long before the doctor arrived John had followed Jess' example, and, to the intense alarm of Mrs. Neville, who was vainly endeavoring to check the flow of blood, which had now become copious, gone off into a dead faint. On the arrival of the doctor it appeared that the bullet had grazed the walls of one of the arteries on the inside of the thigh without actually cutting them, but that they had now given way, which rendered it necessary to tie the artery. This operation, with the assistance of chloroform, he proceeded to successfully carry out on the spot, announcing afterward that a great deal of blood had already been lost.

When at last it was over, Mrs. Neville asked about John being moved up to the hospital, but the doctor declared that he must stop where he was, and that Jess must stop and help to nurse him, with the assistance of a soldier's wife to would send down.

"Bear me," said Mrs. Neville, "that is very awkward."

"It will be awkwarder if you try to move him at present," was the grim reply, "for the silk may slip, in which case the artery will probably tweak out again, and he will bleed to death."

As for Jess, she said nothing, but set to work to make preparations for her task of nursing. As fate had once more thrown them together, she accepted the position gladly, though it is only fair to say that she would not have sought it.

In about an hour's time, just as John was beginning to recover from the painful effects of the chloroform, the soldier's wife who was to assist her in nursing arrived. She was, as Jess soon discovered, not only a low stamp of woman, but both careless and ignorant into the bargain, and all that she could be relied on to do was to carry out some of the rougher work of the sick room. When John woke up and discovered whose was the presence that was bending over him and wipes the cool hand that lay upon his forehead, he groaned again and went to sleep. But Jess did not go to sleep. She sat by him there throughout the night, until at last the cold lights of the dawn came gleaming through the window and fell upon the white face of the man she loved. He was still sleeping soundly, and, as the night was exceedingly hot and oppressive, she had left nothing but a sheet over him. Before she went to rest a little herself she turned to look at him once more, and as she did so saw the sheet suddenly grow red with blood. The artery had broken out again.

Calling to the soldier's wife to run across to the doctor, Jess shook her patient until he woke, for he was sleeping sweetly through the whole thing, and would, no doubt, have continued to do so until he glided into a deeper sleep and then have given them they did what they could to quench that dreadful pumping flow, Jess knotting her handkerchief round his leg and twisting it with a stick, while he pressed his thumb upon the severed artery. But stirs as he might as regards her eyes and hair, even a good looking person. But at that moment John thought that her face was touched with a divinier beauty than he had yet seen on the face of woman. It thrilled him and appealed, but not as Bessie's beauty had appealed, but to that other side of his nature, of which Jess alone could turn the key. Her face was more like to the face of a spirit than a human being's, and it almost frightened him to see it.

"Jess," he said at last, "what are you thinking of?"

She started, and her face resumed its normal air. It was as though a mask had been suddenly set upon it.

"Why do you ask?" she said.

"Because I want to know. I never saw you look like that before."

She laughed a little.

"You would think me foolish if I told you what I was thinking about. Never mind, it has gone wherever thoughts go. I will tell you what I am thinking about now, which is—that it is about time the doctor got out of this place. My uncle and Bessie will be half distracted."

"Bear me," said Jess, "that is very awkward."

"And then followed another long half hour of slashing and tying and horror, and when at last the unfortunate John opened his eyes again he was too weak to speak, and could only smile feebly. For three days after this he was in a dangerous state, for if the artery had broken out for the third time the chances were that, having so little blood left in his veins, he would die before anything could be done for him. At times he was very delirious from weakness, and these were the dangerous hours, for it was almost impossible to keep him quiet, and every movement threw Jess into an agony of terror lest the silk fastenings of the artery should break away. Indeed, there was only one way in which she could keep him quiet, and that was by laying her slim white hand upon his forehead or giving it to him to hold. Oddly enough, this had more effect upon his fevered mind than anything else. For hour after hour she would sit thus, though her arm ached and her back felt as if it were going to break in two, until at last she was rewarded by seeing his wild eyes cease their wanderings and close in peaceful sleep.

Yet with it all that week was perhaps the happiest time in her life. There he lay, the man she loved with all the intensity of her deep nature; and she ministered to him, and felt that he loved her, and depended on her as a babe upon its mother. Even in his delirium her name was continually on his lips, and generally with some endearing term before it. She felt in these dark hours of doubt and sickness as though they two were growing life to life, knit up in a divine identity she could not analyze or understand. She felt that it was so, and she believed that, once being so, whatever her future might be, that communion could never be dissolved, and that force was she happy, though she knew that his recovery meant their lifelong separation. Once, though Jess had once, when thrown utterly off her balance, given her passionate way, it was not a thing she meant to repeat. She had, she felt, injured Bessie enough already in taking her future husband's heart. That she could not help now, but she would take no more. John should go back to her sister.

And so she sat and gazed at that sleeping man through the long watches of the night and was happy. There lay her joy. Soon he would be taken from her and she would be left desolate, but while he lay there he was hers. It was passing sweet to her woman's fancy that you said or that I did since the time when you came in wounded and found that I had fainted."

"Quite so," said John; "I renounce them all."

"We renounce them all," she corrected, and gave a solemn little nod of her head and sighed, and thus they ratified that audacious compact of oblivion.

But it was a lie, and they both knew that it was a lie. If love had existed before, was there anything in his helplessness and her long and tender care to make it less? Alas! no; rather was their companionship the more perfect and their sympathy the more complete. "Propinquity, sir; propinquity," as the wise man said; we know the evils of it.

From that day forward they forgot that scene in the sitting room of "The Palatial," when Jess put out her strength and John bent and broke before it like a rush before the wind. Surely it was a part of the delirium! They forgot that now, alas! they loved each other with a love that did but gather force from its despair. They talked of Bessie, and of John's marriage, and discussed Jess' plans for going to Europe, just as though these were not matters of spiritual life and death to each of them. In short, however they might for one brief moment have gone astray, now, to their honor be it said, they followed the path of duty with unflinching feet, nor did they cry when the stones cut them.

But it was all a living lie, and they knew it. For between them stood the irrevocable Past, who for good or evil had bound them together in his unchanging bonds, and with cords that could not be broken.

CHAPTER XIX.

HANS COETZER COMES TO PRETORIA.

When once he had taken the turn, John's recovery was rapid. Naturally of a vigorous constitution, when the artery had finally united he soon made up for the great loss of blood which he had undergone, and a little more than a month from the date of his wound was, physically, almost as good a man as ever.

One morning—it was the 20th of March—Jess and he were sitting in "The Palatial" garden. John was lying in a long cane deck chair that Jess had borrowed or stolen out of one of the deserted houses, and smoking a pipe.

They sat in silence; John puffing away at his pipe, and Jess, her work—one of his socks—lying idly upon her knees, with her hands clasped over it and her eyes fixed upon the lights and shadows that played with broad fingers upon the wooded slopes beyond.

John finished his pipe, and, although she did not know it, was watching her face, which, now that she was off her guard, was no longer impassive, but seemed to mirror the tender and glorious hope that was floating through her mind. Her lips were slightly parted, and her wide eyes were full of a soft, strange light, while on the whole countenance was a look of eager thought and spiritualized desire such as he had known portrayed in ancient masterpieces upon the face of the virgin mother. Jess was not, except as regards her eyes and hair, even a good looking person. But at that moment John thought that her face was touched with a divinier beauty than he had yet seen on the face of woman. It thrilled him and appealed, but not as Bessie's beauty had appealed, but to that other side of his nature, of which Jess alone could turn the key. Her face was more like to the face of a spirit than a human being's, and it almost frightened him to see it.

"Jess," he said at last, "what are you thinking of?"

She started, and her face resumed its normal air. It was as though a mask had been suddenly set upon it.

"Why do you ask?" she said.

"Because I want to know. I never saw you look like that before."

She laughed a little.

"You would think me foolish if I told you what I was thinking about. Never mind, it has gone wherever thoughts go. I will tell you what I am thinking about now, which is—that it is about time you got out of this place. My uncle and Bessie will be half distracted."

"We've had more than two months of it now. The relieving column can't be far off," suggested John; for these foolish people in Pretoria labored under a firm belief that one fine morning they would be gratified with the sight of the light dancing down a long line of British bayonets, and of Boers evaporating in every direction like storm clouds before the sun.

Jess shook her head. She was beginning to lose faith in relieving columns that never came.

"If we don't help ourselves, my opinion is that we may stop here till we are starved out, which we pretty well are. However, it's no use talking about it, so I'm off to get our rations. Let's see, have you got everything you want?"

"Everything, thanks."

"Well, then, mind you stop quiet till I come back."

"Why," laughed John, "I am as strong as a horse."

"Possibly; but that is what the doctor said, you know. Good-bye!" And Jess took her big basket and started on what John used to feebly call her "provisional undertaking."

She had not got fifty paces from the door before she suddenly caught sight of a familiar form seated on a familiar pony. The form was fat and jovial looking, and the pony was small but also fat. It was Hans Coetzee—none other!

Jess could hardly believe her eyes. Old Hans in Pretoria! What could it mean?

"Om Coetzee! Om Coetzee!" she called, as he came ambling past her, evidently making for the Heidelberg road.

The old Boer pulled up his pony, and gazed around him in a mystified way.

"Here, Om Coetzee! Here!"

"Allemachter!" he said, by jerking his pony round. "It's you, Missie Jess, is it? Now who would have thought of seeing you here?"

"Who would have thought of seeing you here?" she answered.

"Yes, yes; it seems strange; I dare say that it seems strange. But I am a messenger of peace, like Uncle Noah's dove in the ark, you know. The fact is," and he glanced round to see if anybody were listening, "I have been sent by the government to arrange about an exchange of prisoners."

"The government! What government?"

"What government? Why, the triumvirate, of course—whom may the Lord bless and prosper as he did Jonah when he walked on the wall of the city."

"Joshua, when he walked round the wall of the city," suggested Jess. "Jonah walked down the whale's throat."

"Ah! to be sure, so he did, and blew a trumpet inside. I remember now; though I am sure I don't know how he did it. The fact is that our glorious victories have quite confused me. Ah! what a thing it is to be a patriot! The dear Lord makes strong the arm of the patriot, and time after time cures that he hits his man well in the middle."

"You have turned wonderfully patriotic all of a sudden, Om Coetzee," said Jess, tartly.

"Yes, missie, yes; I am a patriot to the bone of my back. I hate the English government; d—n the English government! Let us have our land back and our volksraad. Almighty! I saw who was in the right at Laing's Nek then. Ah, those poor roibaatjes! I shot four of them myself; two as they came up and two as they ran away, and the last one went head over heels like a buck. Poor man, I cried for him afterward. I did not like going to fight at all, but Frank Muller sent to me and said that if I did not go he would have me shot. Ah, he is a devil of a man, that Frank Muller! So I went, and when I saw how the dear Lord had put it into the heart of the English general to be a bigger fool even that day than he is every day, and to try and drive us out of Laing's Nek with a thousand of his poor roibaatjes, then, I tell you, I saw which was the right lay, and I said, 'D—n the English government! What is the English government doing here?' and after Isugoo I said it again."

"Never mind all that, Om Coetzee," broke in Jess. "I have heard you tell a different tale before, and perhaps you will again. Tell me, how are my uncle and my sister? Are they at the farm?"

"Almighty! you don't suppose that I have been there to see, do you? But, yes, I have heard they are there. It is a nice place, that Moolfontein, and I think that I shall buy it when we have turned all you English people out of the land. Frank Muller told me that they were there. And now I must be getting on, or that devil of a man, Frank Muller, will want to know what I have been about."

"Om Coetzee," said Jess, "will you do something for me?"

"We are old friends, you know, and I once persuaded my uncle to lend you £500 when all your oxen died of the lungsick."

"WE WILL FORGET EVERYTHING."

A CAPTAIN'S EXPERIENCE.

A New Explanation of the Oregon Disaster, and some other Information of Great Importance.

The mystery surrounding the steamship Oregon has never been solved. That a vessel crashed into her is certain—that is all. The best evidence we have yet encountered is that of Captain S Greenwood, master of the steamer Kanawha, which runs between Newport News, Va., and Providence, R. I. In conversation with the writer, Capt. Greenwood said:

CAPT. GREENWOOD.

"On the night in which the Oregon was sunk, I was steaming along on a course South and East of the collision. It was about 11 o'clock when the lookout reported a sail on the port bow. I was on the bridge at the time and immediately sighted the boat. It seemed to be moving in an unsteady manner, although most of its sails were set. As we came nearer I saw it was bearing directly over our course without any regard for the rules of navigation. I accordingly slowed down, and finding she still kept her course heered off in order to avoid the possibility of a collision. As she passed us I hailed her, but received no reply, although I do not detect any life upon her, but her lights were burning. She seemed to be flowing along almost in any direction and without any regard for other vessels. I am quite sure it was the same craft that a few hours afterwards ran into the Oregon.

"But Captain, how do you account for her strange actions?"

"There are several theories. One is that the entire crew were taken

THE DISASTER.

suddenly sick."

"That would hardly be probable, would it?"

"Why not? I noticed in the papers a few days ago, that over 300 unfortunate men, women and children at a picnic party in New Jersey were taken deathly sick and remained so for hours. Is it not reasonable that the poor fellows aboard the ship might meet the same fate?"

"But is sickness common on shipboard?"

"As common as on land. I always go provided for emergencies, and what is more, I protect my men against the coming on of disease."

"How?"

"Whenever I notice men complaining of pains in the back or sides; a tired feeling; lack of appetite; despondency; want of energy; and many other things I know what it means and that I must stop such feelings at once, or I shall have a sick or possibly dead man on shipboard. Fortunately I have found something that removes all these troubles quickly and surely."

"And do you only use it on shipboard?"

"No, indeed, I use it in my own family. My wife had those troubles which nearly every woman has—weakness, bearing down pains and irregularities, which finally ended in a very large and painful swelling in the side. The best physicians of New York treated her. Some called it a tumor others a rupture, but none cured her. I began to use the wonderful remedy I used on the steamer. In a very short time the swelling disappeared, she regained her health and strength, and is perfectly well to-day."

"A WELL MAN"

"And what medicine is it, pray?"

"Hunt's Remedy. I myself have been cured of a terrible case of catarrh of the bladder by its use. I would not be with out it for anything. I have had several men on my steamer that had the first stages of Bright's disease, where the kidneys were beyond a question, but they are now all well men to-day."

Captain Greenwood is a man of standing, and his statements can be relied upon. There is so much [illegible] testimony about this same [illegible] that the public are well [illegible] that this great remedy is [illegible] disease and death [illegible]

Sunday-School Lesson.

For July 3d.

The Infant Jesus.—Matthew ii, 1-12.

Notes.—The Gospel of Matthew was written in Palestine, and for the use of the Jews. Some say it was written first in Hebrew. Its object is to show to the Jews that Jesus is the promised King of the Jews or the Messiah. It therefore refers much to the prophecies of the Jewish Scripture.——"When Jesus was born."—Four or five years earlier than the accepted date of our era, i. e., 1891 or 1892 years ago.——"In Bethlehem of Judea."—Not the other Bethlehem, in Zebulon, near Nazareth. It is mentioned as the Judea Bethlehem so as to show that it fulfills the prophecy quoted in verse 6. It was also called Bethlehem Ephratah, and was about six miles nearly south from Jerusalem.——"Herod."—The first of the name, Herod the Great, an able, cruel man. This happened, perhaps, in his last year.——"Wise men from the East."—Or, better; magi. This name was given to the priests and astrologers of Persia. If they started when Christ was born, it must now have been some months later.——"Worship at the star."—Jews had been, ever since the Captivity, many learned Jews in the East, and from them the knowledge that the Messiah was expected about this time, would have spread among the heathen about.——"His star."—What that star was is not at all clear, as we are not told. Some have made it a conjunction of the planets, but it is not clear how that could have served to direct the wise men to Bethlehem. It may have been a remarkable meteor, but that is not an evident explanation. It is described as if it were a special miraculous appearance.——"Was troubled."—"If a king" was expected, Herod the king might well have been troubled for his throne. Jerusalem would have been disturbed, and all the friends of Herod would be anxious.——"All the chief priests and scribes."—This would seem to include the whole Sanhedrim. He would naturally go to them for information.——"The Christ."—Not Christ, but "the Christ"; the prophesied annointed one, Messiah.——"And thou, Bethlehem," etc.—The quotation is not exact at all, according to the Hebrew, but more nearly follows the Greek. It is taken from Micah v, 2.——"Privily called."—Secretly.——"Carefully."—So as to know how old the child was.——"Worship him."—Not as God, but show him honor and reverence.——"Where the young child was."—No longer in Herod's stable but in the house where they were living.——"With Mary his mother."—Joseph is not mentioned, as the young child would be left to his mother's care.——"Fell down."—In the Eastern way of bending forward and touching the forehead to the ground.

Instruction.—It was because they were wise men that they sought and found the Christ. The wiser a man is the more he will want to know about Christ. It is the fools that don't care.

It would seem as if the very heathen were ready to worship the coming Christ. We have here an indication that Christianity was to be a universal religion, and not a mere Jewish sect. We also get a hint that the Spirit of God does not work in men alone. The influences of grace come in some way to them also, and in their religion there may be elements of truth which God can use for their good.

Jesus is to be sought for. These men came hundreds of miles to find him. How far are you willing to go to find him? Are you willing to go to Sunday-school, to church, to your pastor's study? Are you willing to ask direction? Are you afraid or ashamed to ask? Do you really want to know where to find Christ?

The priests could give an answer; can you, when some friend or scholar asks you where he can find Christ?

Herod was "troubled." He did not want the Christ to come. It is remarkable that so many people do not want to have Christ to come. They don't want to be interfered with.

Goodness is a great trouble. Good people are a great nuisance to other folks. Why cannot saloon-keepers be let alone? Good people can't let them alone. They are bound to trouble them.

We do not hear that the scribes and priests went running down to Bethlehem to see Christ. Is not that strange? Would we not have expected them to be the first? Instead of this it was only the Persian idolaters, just as a little later it was a Samaritan that returned to give glory to God, and, as in the parable the Samaritan only cared for the man who fell among thieves. Of all the Jews in Jerusalem only Herod sought him, and he only to kill him. Let us see that our profession is of more worth than theirs.

With worship go offerings. Indeed, giving is a good part of worship. The best we have should be given to Christ.

The glow of health and buoyant spirits I possess are due to the use of "I. F." Atwood Medicine. Trade-mark "I. F."

Ticknor's Paper Series is a happy idea of the publishers. It includes a number of the most famous and successful of the novels of the past five years,—books like Guenn, The Story of a Country Town, A Nameless Nobleman, and The Story of Margaret Kent, and others of equal value and merit; and with these come brilliant new works like De Montalembert's, The Cruise of a Woman Hater, and the vivid and fascinating Venetian novel, The House of the Musician, by Virginia W. Townsend, whose The Neptune Vase won such great praise a few years ago. They are handsome and shapely volumes, substantially bound in decorated heavy paper covers. The series for 1887 will include fifteen volumes, appearing one each week during June, July, and July. The retail price is fifty cents each volume, a remarkably low price for such handsomely-printed and made-up copy right books.

The frontispiece in the American Magazine for July reproduces a painting by Seaton Donoho, bearing reference to the well-known tradition, embalmed in Maryland archives, that several Indian tribes used to hold their yearly councils on the hill where now stands the national capitol. Under the title "Metlakahtla," Z. L. White tells, with illustrations, the story of the complete civilization of an Indian tribe on the Northwest Coast. They were fierce savages, cannibals, murderers and regarded as wholly irreclaimable. They now have a thriving town, with a good civic government, and they constitute a moral, industrious community.

The existing social ferment in Europe, and the strained relations between the great powers, threaten the United States with a deluge of immigrants during the next few years. The flood is already rising, and the question becomes urgent, whether a sound public policy does not demand that the introduction of incongruous elements be limited. In the Forum for July, Prof. H. H. Boyesen will have a paper on the social and politicals evils resulting from unrestricted immigration.

"The Popular Science Monthly" for July contains several articles bearing on the interests of the business world. Foremost among them is the first of a series by David A. Wells, on the Recent Economic Disturbances since 1873," in which the author describes the progress of the present business depression, and mentions the various causes that have been assigned for it in the leading commercial countries. Mr. Stuart A. Weld, in a temperate and instructive article on the Panama Canal, describes the present condition and the prospects of that important undertaking. H. H. Gardner's "Lawsuit or Legacy" is of concern to every person interested in life-insurance.

The July number of HARPER'S MAGAZINE opens with a very strong article, in the series of Great American Industries, on printing, containing the important article in the previous number on paper. Though an old subject, it is treated most freshly and concisely, and with special attention to the least familiar parts of the industry which is most intimately identified with the present civilization.

THE MOST WONDERFUL FAMILY REMEDY EVER KNOWN.

Make Your Hens Lay

By Feeding Rawson's Hen Feed!

The purest, most healthy, and cheapest in the market. One package will convince the most skeptical person it pays to feed it. It will keep the fowls healthy, and keep distempers from your flocks and make a large increase in amount of eggs; and the eggs will hatch more readily when it is fed to your hens. It is not a costly feed; try one package and you will always feed it afterwards. Put up in larger packages than any other kind now in the market, and will always give entire satisfaction. Put up by J. H. RAWSON, Paris, Me., Breeder of Fancy Poultry, and Proprietor of Rawson's Horse and Cattle Medicine. 9-0

CONSISTING OF

7 Different Grades of Top Buggies!

Two Seated Wagons, Open Buggies, Road Wagons and Jogging Carts.

After 37 years experience at Carriage Building, I feel somewhat qualified to judge of the merits of a carriage, and have spared no pains in procuring my stock from factories that build good work adapted to our roads and our needs, and at prices so moderate that they come within the reach of all.

I wish to call especial attention to the above illustration, as one of the latest and best improvements in the way of a Buggy Top, that has ever been presented to the public. It has all the strength and durability of a four bow top, but as the front bow has been removed, you can enter or alight with all the ease of an open buggy.
